Preface

Election Commission of Pakistan in 2015 is a PILDAT Analysis that examines the performance of the ECP in view of its Second Five-year Strategic Plan (2014-2018), and other major developments during 2015.

The paper was first published in January 2016. While the data for the first edition was also obtained from the Election Commission, the second edition presents an updated version on the performance of the Election Commission of Pakistan in 2015 based on feedback and interaction with the Election Commission of Pakistan. This updated paper also contains scores against progress shared by the ECP with PILDAT on every single goal under the Second Five-year Strategic Plan (2014-2018).

The General Election 2013 brought the Commission's role in conducting a free and fair election under great scrutiny. This paper looks at the ECP's work in view of the report of the General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission, the conduct of the Local Government Elections during 2015, as well as the ECP's performance in achieving targets set under Second Five-Year Strategic Plan for 2014-2018. Based on the analysis, the paper also suggests certain reforms that may assist the ECP in improving its performance.

The analyses contained in this paper have been prepared by PILDAT as part of the Democracy and Governance programme to assess the performance of key State Institutions under PILDAT's initiative of Citizens' Periodic Report on the Performance of State Institutions. We are grateful to the Election Commission of Pakistan for providing data during various inter-actions in 2015-2016, which has been used in this analysis along with other publically available information.

Executive Summary

The Performance of the Election Commission of Pakistan during 2015 is worth analysing for a number of reasons. Some of the major highlights of this year include the General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission Report and its criticism of the ECP, the ECP's conduct of a number of landmark bye-elections, conduct of Local Government Elections in Cantonment Boards, three Provinces, and Islamabad Capital Territory, and the ECP's efforts to reform, including its quest to meet the targets it set for itself under the Second Five-Year Strategic Plan for 2014-2018.

Based on the progress shared by the ECP against each goal listed under the Second Five-Year Strategic Plan, the Election Commission has obtained an overall progress of 61%. The progress for the targets that were intended to be met by December 2015 has been assessed at 62% whereas it should have been 100%. Meanwhile, the ECP appears to have met only 59% of all targets to be met by 2018.

Year 2015, therefore, should have, logically, been the year that the ECP indulged in organisational soul-searching and constituting effective reforms within itself to turn around both its shortcomings as well as enhance its public image and build public trust. While the ECP reports a few administrative measures to address the issues raised through the General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission report, no ruthless internal accountability and concrete reforms have come about. The report of the Inquiry Commission is so profound, direct and comprehensive in its criticism of almost all departments of the ECP that the ECP leadership should have taken much more drastic and speedy corrective actions than it actually has. In view of the fact that public trust in the ECP also suffered due to this severe criticism of the election management, the ECP should have designed and adopted a much more robust communications strategy to engage public, political parties and media. Unfortunately this also does not seem to have happened.

Year 2015 also saw the ECP conduct one of the largest electoral exercises across major parts of Pakistan through the Local Government system. Sadly, though, at the beginning, much the same election-day mismanagement was reflected in the KP Local Government elections, the ECP improved its performance of management of Local Government elections in Sindh and the Punjab.

The most sticking issue of the ECP has been its inability to exercise its constitutional and legal powers effectively and assert its constitutional authority. While the ECP has put in place ample amount of rules and codes, most backed by legal provisions such as the ceiling on election expenses, the ECP has never been able to ensure strict compliance to these rules and laws. The bye-election in NA-122 (Lahore-V) offered the most unfortunate example of the ECP's lack of control and ability to ensure compliance of basic electoral laws and rules such as the naked display of money power that failed to provoke the ECP into action, among others.

It is true that the ECP has had to bear the brunt of judicial inquest and constant interference by the Judiciary in its work; it failed to institutionalise an effective system of legal response. The issue has found further credence in the words by the Honourable Chief Election Commissioner who was quoted as saying that the "High Courts should avoid interfering in the matters of the Election Commission of Pakistan and lawyers should come to the ECP, instead of relying on verdicts from the High Courts."<sup>1</sup> However, the ECP had the option to deal with this differently. In the case of the NA-122 bye-election and Lahore High Court's relief to the PTI's petition allowing elected representatives to campaign, and the subsequent loud and clear violations of codes and laws by the sitting Government and other parties, the dignified route available to the ECP should have been to call-off the bye-election. The ECP caused irreparable damage to its credibility by not cancelling the bye-election. One of the ECP's greatest weaknesses has been its inability to have an effective strategy to deal with the Courts.

PILDAT believes that once an election cycle commences, the ECP should be given a free hand to conduct the election and discharge its constitutional obligations. The honourable courts should also restrain their interference during the election cycle and all such grievances which may arise during an election cycle should be addressed at the end of the cycle in the form of election petitions as provided in the law. It should be recognised that courts' activism during the election cycle has undermined the effectiveness of the ECP. Irresponsible criticism and wild allegations by certain political leaders using highly objectionable language against the officials of the ECP also compromised the position of this important state institution. Due criticism within the parameters of law and decency is a part of the democratic culture but on many occasions these boundaries were crossed and it must have demoralised the ECP staff.

1. Remarks made by the CEC on November 17, 2015 during the hearing of various election petitions. For details, please see: <http://www.pakistantoday.com.pk/2015/11/17/national/cec-doesnt-approve-of-judges-meddling-in-ecp-affairs/>

The ECP enjoys low level of public trust, which further plummeted from 43% in 2014 to 37% in 2015.<sup>2</sup> The ECP has failed to develop any effective mechanism of regular and effective media and public interaction in 2015.

On achieving its strategic objectives set under the ECP Second Five-Year Strategic Plan 2014-2018, the ECP has achieved 61% progress against the 159 goals by December 2015. Three goals that are on-going were not included in the calculations made by PILDAT. The ECP has achieved 62% progress within one and a half year out of 98 goals, which were to be achieved by December 2015. The ECP achieved 59% progress against 61 goals that are to be met by 2018. In comparison, regarding the First Five-Year Strategic Plan (2010-2014), the progress achieved until 2013 was 66%. In the case of the Second Five-Year Plan, the ECP has achieved 61% progress in 3 years before the 2018 deadline therefore it is hoped that all deadlines may be met by 2018. The ECP is, at least partly, justified in attributing the incomplete progress against the deadlines to be met by December 2015 due to its heavy engagement in Local Government elections throughout the year.

On achieving its strategic objectives set under the ECP Second Five-Year Strategic Plan 2014-2018, the ECP has achieved 61% progress against all the 162 goals laid by December 2015. The ECP has achieved 62% progress within one and a half year out of 98 goals, which were to be achieved by December 2015. The ECP has achieved 59% progress against 61 goals that are to be achieved by 2018. The ECP is, at least partly, justified in attributing this progress due to its heavy engagement in Local Government elections throughout the year.

The Paper concludes with following recommendations for reform and improvements in the role of the ECP:

1. Free hand to the ECP during election cycle. The ECP must be treated by all pillars of the State with the level of respect this independent statutory body deserves and that is accorded to electoral authorities in other democracies such as India. Following the Indian example, the Superior Judiciary should intervene in the electoral process until after its completion.
2. Review of ECP Capacity in the face of new responsibilities and challenges. Since after the 18th Amendment to the Constitution in 2010, the responsibilities of the ECP have enhanced many folds. The ECP should undertake a comprehensive study of its human resource needs to meet the enhanced responsibilities.
3. Political Parties cannot be absolved of the obligation to contribute to orderly elections. They must educate their workers and voters on the polling procedures, train their polling agents and teach tolerance to their workers.
4. Weak Public Relations by the ECP, which enjoys nearly total constitutional autonomy, has resulted from its inability to seek media and public support, two strongest allies of electoral bodies in any country. The ECP must appoint a senior person as the ECP spokesperson.
5. Greater Accessibility of the CEC and EC Members to political parties and Public is required to build greater trust and engagement with stakeholders
6. The ECP must urgently make public the General Election 2013 Report by the ECP, which, even after the lapse of 31 months, is not made available.
7. The ECP should adopt the practice of compiling and releasing an Annual Report that all Federal Government ministries and divisions are bound by the rules of business to issue.
8. The ECP must urgently address its biggest weakness of Enforceability of Election Laws, Rules and regulations.
9. Election Tribunals be made to complete their work within the mandated period of four months
10. The ECP Website – which offers a great improvement, requires further enhancements such as posting of Form-14 (The Statement of Count), 15 (Ballot Paper Account), 16 (Consolidation Statement of Results of Count by Presiding Officers) and 17, (Result of Count) details of voter turnout figures and detailed statistics of Local Government elections, political parties' annual statements of accounts, etc.
11. Regular Feedback to Public on the ECP Initiatives must be given by the ECP and the ECP must conform to openness, accessibility and transparency standards.
- 12. The ECP should develop its Federal Election Academy into an effective training facility, which remains functional throughout the year and not just when an election is around the corner.

Introduction

The calendar year 2015 is an important period to analyse the performance of the ECP for a number of reasons. The General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission Report and its criticism of the ECP, the ECP's conduct of a number of landmark bye-elections, conduct of Local Government Elections in Cantonment Boards, three Provinces, Islamabad Capital Territory as well as the ECP's efforts at reform, including its quest to meet the targets it set for itself under the Second Five-Year Strategic Plan for 2014-2018 are some of the key highlights of the year in review.

In 2015, 59% respondents of a nationwide survey in Pakistan termed Pakistan's 10th General Election held in 2013, to be free and fair. At the same time, 70% respondents believed reform is critical in the way the ECP works.<sup>3</sup>

This need for reform was also highlighted in the report of the General Election (GE) 2013 Inquiry Commission. Formed on April 04, 2015 through an ordinance to investigate if the GE-2013 were conducted freely and fairly.<sup>4</sup> The Inquiry Commission presented its findings on July 22, 2015, affirming in many ways the earlier PILDAT analysis<sup>5</sup> that while the quality of pre-election phase was significantly better as compared to previous Elections, it was the polling day mismanagement by the ECP that resulted in dissatisfaction with the conduct of General Election 2013. The ECP, charged with the constitutional responsibility to conduct free and fair elections, was advised to dispassionately analyse the weaknesses and shortcomings experienced during the polling-day and post-poll phases and initiate actions to address the flaws.

General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission

The General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission consisted of three Supreme Court judges: Chief Justice Nasir-ul-Mulk as Chairman, Justice Amir Hani Muslim, and Justice Ejaz Afzal Khan. After its first sitting on April 09, 2015,<sup>6</sup> a total of 9 sittings were held while the Commission presented its findings on July 22, 2015.<sup>7</sup>

The report indicated that the onus of any irregularities during GE-2013 was on the inefficiencies of the ECP. It highlighted three major shortcomings of the ECP:

- i. Lack of planning on part of the ECP:
  - a. The formula for printing excess ballot papers (i.e., rounding up on the basis of polling stations), especially in the Punjab, was not adequately communicated to the Returning Officers (ROs).
  - b. Number of ballots were not uniformly rounded even where Provincial Election Commission (PEC) determined the number of ballots;
  - c. Decision to rely on only four printing presses was fraught given the capacity issues of these printing press;
  - d. An ink ought to have been developed and the necessary equipment purchased to ensure an accurate forensic analysis of disputed votes could be made;
  - e. Failure to use Result Management System (RMS) on Election Day;
  - f. Provision of polling material in various constituencies faced a delay;
  - g. ECP had still not acquired its own storage space;
- ii. Lack of training, overload of Returning Officers and Presiding Officers (POs) and failure to comply with the electoral laws
- iii. Lack of Co-ordination between ECP, PEC's and activities on the ground.

An in-depth analysis of the Inquiry Commission report portrays the unmistakable impression that the conduct of the Election, that merited a careful, serious approach, has in general been taken lightly. The report puts forward a sad reflection of the casual approach that dominated the entire process and system of election handled by the Election Commission of Pakistan, the caretaker Governments, the district returning officers, the returning officers, the polling staff, election contestants and their respective political parties. The Inquiry Commission sums it up when it states in the report that it was the ECP's responsibility to prepare for the 2013 General Election and that it had ample time to do so. But the evidence before the Commission has suggested inadequate planning on the part of the ECP.

A number of reports emanating from election tribunals hearing poll petitions on the NA-122, Lahore-V and NA-154, Lodhran-I constituencies, for example, also reflected similar flaws in election management by the ECP. The election tribunal in Lahore in its order on the NA-122 polls while criticising the conduct of the NADRA accusing it of misguiding the tribunal by offering 'novel theories' and attempting to explain the mistakes of the polling staff, largely blamed the ECP for lack of required planning.

An analysis of the measures undertaken by the ECP to address the concerns highlighted in the Inquiry Commission Report reveals that the response of the ECP has largely been in setting up various committees. The ECP has reported to have made the following administrative adjustments/reforms to rectify the shortcomings:

- i. National Coordination Committee: The Commission constituted the National Coordination Committee on July 27, 2015, with a view to deliberate on the policy issues. According to the rules of business, the committee is to meet every month. The Chairman of this Committee is a Member of the ECP by rotation and the other Committee members include Secretary ECP, Additional Secretary (Administration/Elections) and Provincial Election Commissioners. The committee is responsible for ensuring that there are no ambiguities in electoral laws/policies; and the ECP is well-acquainted with ground realities and requirements in respect of Electoral reforms/matters.
- ii. Planning Committee: The Planning Committee was also constituted on July 27, 2015. It is a five-member committee chaired by Secretary ECP, while other members consist of Additional Secretary (TRE), Additional Secretary (Administration/Elections), Provincial Election Commissioners and Additional Director General (PR). The responsibilities of the Planning Committees, as identified by the ECP are:

1. Prepare strategy for the next General Elections in terms of human and financial resources;
2. Work out timelines for every activity necessary for holding General Elections;
3. Work out implementation mechanism for Electoral Reforms, which is already in process in the Parliament;
4. Work out a logistic plan including the requirement of Printing Presses, Storage Spaces, office accommodation and Transport, etc.;
5. Regularly review the training plan for the Polling Staff; and
6. Keep all other factors in view with reference to General Elections.

- iii. Monitoring Wing: A Monitoring Wing was established during July 2015 to monitor the administration side, headed by Director General (Administration). The four Provincial Election Commissioners have also established similar wings in their respective PECs. This wing is mainly responsible for monitoring of pre-poll day activities, poll day activities, post-poll activities, and training activities. The Monitoring Wing constituted 150 teams that were assigned the job during the course of recent Local Government Elections in the Punjab, Sindh and ICT.
- iv. Directorate of Research for Overseas Voting: The ECP created a Directorate of Research for Overseas Voting on July 28, 2015. The Commission has raised an independent/designated directorate for research and coordination of overseas voting. The Director of this directorate would serve as a Focal Point for coordination on the subject. This directorate consists of Director Research (BPS-19), Assistant Director (BPS-17), Senior Assistant (BPS-15) and Junior Personal Assistant (BPS-14).

- v. Complaint Cell: Under the supervision of Additional Director General (Electoral Roll) a Complaint Cell was formed on July 15, 2015, to redress complaints related to pre-poll, poll day and post-poll activities. Respective officers from Grade 17 and Grade 18 of the ECP were assigned to address these complaints related to their domain.

The judicial Commission report also highlighted lack of training of the polling staff. Realising the need of training of the polling staff, the ECP created a Training Wing that is headed by Additional Secretary (Training, Research and Evaluation) assisted by an Additional Director General (Training).

Traditionally, a Secretary and one Additional Secretary have been serving in the Commission. However, since issuance of the report by the Inquiry Commission, the Election Commission created another slot in BPS-21 and now two Additional Secretaries are serving exclusively in the areas shown in Table 1.

However, no tangible improvement in management of Election Day has been witnessed in elections held after the report of the Inquiry Commission since July 2015. Key outputs and outcomes of the three entities created and associated changes in the staffing are not known. There is a need to define the time-bound targets of these new and many other old entities within the ECP and closely monitor the progress periodically and share the results publically.

Conduct of Local Government Elections in 2015

In 2015, the ECP conducted one of the largest electoral exercises in the country in the form of Local Government Elections held in Cantonment Boards, Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa, the Punjab, Sindh and Islamabad Capital Territory (ICT).

Table 2 shows the total number of seats contested and the number of polling stations where these elections were held. The Commission conducted the Punjab, Sindh, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Cantonment Board and Islamabad Capital Territory LG Elections during 2015.

The Complaint Cell of the Election Commission of Pakistan (ECP) set up a control room in Islamabad and Provincial offices to handle voters' complaints for Local Government elections in Islamabad, the Punjab and Sindh on the day of poll.<sup>8</sup> Table 3 shows the type and number of complaints received during these polls and the number of complaints addressed.

The highest numbers of complaints received were related to recounting of votes, security issues and polling stations. Poll-Day complaints were received through control rooms and some of these complaints were reported to and have been addressed in real-time. This complaint cell was created in July 2015 after the Local Government elections in KP and Balochistan.

Figure 1 further explains the type of complaints received during each LG election. The highest number of complaints received was from the Punjab. Mainly issues related to polling stations, DROs and ROs and security were highlighted in the Province. The highest number of complaints received in Sindh were related to recounting of votes, whereas, voter in ICT has more poll-day complaints.

Additionally, in order to ensure proper monitoring of the activities of the Local Government elections in the Punjab, Sindh and ICT, the Monitoring Wing planned and implemented ownership of two districts by one officer of BPS-20 and above. Moreover, 200 officers/officials carried out this monitoring exercise in addition to extensive coordination with media and independent observers who assisted in conducting this assignment successfully. Table 4 shows the number of teams deployed in monitoring Local Government elections in the Punjab, Sindh and ICT. This Monitoring Wing was established after the Local Government Elections were held in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa.

elections from Punjab were 710, while 337 were appointed for Sindh and 10 for ICT. The ECP informed that these DROs and ROs were trained by the ECP with assistance from external bodies such as the UNDP. It is not clear how extensive and effective was the training and how different was this training from previous similar exercises with unsatisfactory results.

While the ECP must be commended for carrying out the largest electoral exercise, in terms of the total number of candidates contesting and the number of polling stations (as shown in Table 2), major issues, similar mostly to mismanagement experienced and documented in General Election 2013, were evident in the electoral exercise across the country.

Earlier in 2015, major issues were encountered in the conduct of Local Government elections in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. The polling staff generally lacked election training. Some provincial ministers and other influential politicians were reported to have flexed their muscles and tried to influence the polling staff. Isolated cases of staff partisanship were reported. It was the responsibility of the ECP to accurately estimate the number of expected voters. The ECP held a few mock exercises to ascertain the time taken by each voter to cast seven ballots. However, based on the outcome of these mock exercises, the ECP should have ascertained the required number of polling booths for a nine-hour-long polling day. The assumptions of this exercise may have been gravely flawed as booths in most polling stations proved far less than required. Most of the violent incidents had their roots in crowded polling stations, a long wait to cast votes and the inability of the polling staff to properly guide and manage the exercise. After the conduct of the Local Government election, the ECP disclosed that it wanted to hold the KP Local Government election in phases but it relented in the face of the Provincial Government's opposition. This was certainly a serious case of abdication of responsibility on the part of the ECP. A process of soul-searching and introspection should ensue at the ECP and lead to specific actions and systemic reforms.

Perhaps learning from the flaws of the KP Local Government elections, LG polls conducted in Islamabad, the Punjab and Sindh were relatively better planned and, in the case of the Punjab and Sindh, held in phases. This helped the ECP regain some lost ground in Election Day management. However, serious electoral reforms need to be put into place to conduct better-managed future elections.

The voters' turnout figures for these Local Government Elections reveal an interesting trend. Turnout for voters for Local Government elections was highest in the Punjab with nearly 61.08% turnout, followed by 50% in ICT and 49.27% in Sindh. The turnout remained as low as 40.50% in KP and 33% in Cantonment Boards. Table 5 shows area wise breakdown of voter turnout.

The overall turnout remained high in Punjab but voter turnout for more developed areas such as Model Town and Gulberg in Lahore remained low, whereas, higher turnout was witnessed from relatively less developed areas such as Wagah or Ghowind in Lahore. A similar trend was also noticed in Local Government elections of ICT. The turnout for Saidpur Village and Mughal Village remained twice as large as the turnout for F-6.

A Culture of Lack of Consultation

The ECP, despite its critical role in democracy, continues to portray a culture of exclusiveness that shies away from consultation and public outreach. This tendency has manifested itself during 2015 as well.

In May 2015, the ECP quietly changed its code of conduct for by-elections in three National and Provincial Assembly constituencies by amending its earlier notifications and barring MNAs and MPAs from visiting these constituencies and taking part in the election campaign. The poll schedule for bye-election in the Punjab Assembly constituency PP-196 Multan-IV was announced by the ECP on April 14, 2015 according to which polling was set to take place on May 21. The ECP announced the election schedules for the National Assembly constituency NA-108 Mandi Bahauddin-I and the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Assembly constituency PK-56 Mansehra-IV on April 27, fixing June 08 as polling day. At least for the Punjab Assembly bye-election, the change in the rules of the game occurred barely two weeks before polling day whereas it happened four weeks ahead of the polling day in the other two constituencies.

In each general election, the ECP announces a code of conduct for political parties and candidates. Article 18 of the Political Parties Order 2002 requires that the code of conduct be prepared by the ECP in consultation with the political parties. The ECP had notified a code of conduct on January 28, 2013 for the subsequent general election after circulating the draft among the parties and incorporating their feedback. Section 30 of this code bars various public office-holders from participation in election campaigns in any manner whatsoever. These public office-holders included the President, Prime minister, Chairman/Deputy Chairman Senate, Speaker/Deputy Speaker National Assembly, federal ministers, ministers of state, governors, chief ministers, provincial ministers and advisors to the Prime Minister and the chief ministers. A similar section has been a part of the previous codes of conduct as well but members of the National and Provincial Assemblies were never included in the list of public office-holders barred from participating in an election campaign. Although it was not clear whether the code issued at the time of a general election is applicable to subsequent bye-polls, apparently it is not the case and the ECP normally issues separate notifications for making the code or a part of it applicable to a specific set of bye-elections.

On May 07, the ECP practically amended Section 30 of the code of conduct for political parties and candidates. The change was seen to have taken place quietly because unlike previous changes in the election code of conduct, no process of consultation took place and the change was abruptly announced to the surprise of many political leaders and political parties as reported in the media.

Since the law explicitly required that such a code be prepared in consultation with the political parties, it is in the fitness of things to undertake a process of consultation with the political parties even when an amendment in the code is made, irrespective of the fact whether such a modified direction is issued as a code of conduct or by any other name.

These changes were appealed against by the PTI and a Judge of the Lahore High Court gave them a stay order resulting in suspension of at least part of the code relating to campaign by MNAs and MPAs. However, neither the ECP promptly challenge this in the Supreme Court nor managed to implement the sections of the code of conduct which were not hit by the stay order, such as the bar on campaign by Prime Minister and Ministers, etc.

A similar fate was met to another ECP notification barring media from broadcasting or publishing other than authentic election results of Local Government elections. The change in code was once again made without any prior consultation with the stakeholders. Eventually, once again, the Lahore High Court allowed media to quote unofficial results.

This brings us to two general points about the code of conduct. The general ownership of the political parties of the code of conduct has been weak in Pakistan and the primary reason for that is the minimal participation of political parties in preparing the code. The ECP prepares the code and circulates it among political parties. Very few political parties or political leaders give any meaningful feedback and the ECP finalises the code on that basis.

A meeting convened by the ECP for consultation on the code of conduct prior to the 2008 General Election attracted representatives of only five political parties; none of the mainstream parties such as the PML-N or PPP attended the meeting. Similarly, the ECP also conducted four consultative sessions for the Local Government elections during 2015. These were held in Islamabad, Karachi and Peshawar. The attendance from main political parties remained low. In November 2015, ECP held a session with political parties in Peshawar on reforms for system improvement particularly focusing on the code of conduct. Out of 70 political parties invited to the forum, only 24 attended with district level representation/leadership.

There is a need to take a fresh look at the process and find a way of involving not only political parties but also independent candidates, civil society and media in the consultative process to make the effort more meaningful. An arbitrary amendment in the code of conduct such as the one introduced on May 7 did not help strengthen the ownership of the parties of the code.

A similar code of conduct in India was prepared through the voluntary effort of the political parties without any external prompting. However, once the code was formally adopted by the political parties, the Election Commission of India took it upon itself to monitor and ensure its compliance. The Indian code of conduct over a period of time has evolved into a very strong instrument to keep the electoral process neat and clean. It is very likely that the code of conduct will strengthen its appeal in Pakistan once the participation of stakeholders is made more meaningful.

At present, the code does not have a very strong legal basis. Many sections of it simply reiterate some of the constitutional and legal provisions, and therefore are repetitious. Additional provisions lack any strong legal moorings. The ECP had proposed in 2012-2013 a set of amendments in the Representation of People Act, 1976 but the Parliament at that time failed to pass those amendments. One of the proposed amendments sought to add new provisions to Section 86 of the Representation of People Act to make the violation of the code of conduct punishable under the law. Parliament may take a fresh look at the issue and either convert the provisions of the code into laws or make violation of the code punishable.

Political parties should also consider undertaking an initiative to make the code of conduct a more meaningful document that is fully owned by them. A number of multiparty conferences have taken place in the recent past. It may not be a bad idea to hold one on the subject.

The Parliamentary Committee on Electoral Reforms

Political commitment to reforming the electoral process, which should have been among the top priorities of the elected Government after assuming office in June 2013, remains lukewarm despite nearly 3 years after the General Election 2013.

Even though a number of reforms proposed by the Election Commission remained outstanding since the previous National Assembly and the PPP-led Government chose to ignore them, it was only after the PTI-led street agitation gained momentum and a call for the 'azadi march' was given by Imran Khan that the Prime Minister sprang into action on June 10, 2014 and asked the National Assembly speaker to constitute yet another parliamentary committee on electoral reforms. The speaker of the National Assembly constituted a 33-member Parliamentary Committee on electoral reforms on July 25, 2014. The committee was mandated to complete its recommendations within a period of three months — a time frame which once again did not reflect urgency on the part of the Government. Usually Parliamentary committees are given a month to present a report on a piece of legislation and given the fact that so much well-researched material was already available with the new parliamentary committee, it could have completed its task within that period.

The new Parliamentary Committee which chose the super-efficient, powerful but extremely overworked Senator Ishaq Dar as its chairman, started its business ab initio by inviting proposals from the public through newspaper advertisements and, to give the committee due credit, convened 10 meetings till October 2014.

However, a year and a half later, the Committee has yet to conclude its reform proposals.

An important proposed electoral reform has already become infructuous due to the slow pace of the parliamentary committee. As some reports suggest, a number of electoral reforms proposals received by the committee in response to its public invitation through newspapers asked for a constitutional amendment to not restrict the qualification of the CEC and the members of the Election Commission to judicial background. Or plainly put, a CEC does not necessarily have to be a sitting or former judge of the Supreme Court or a person who is qualified to become a judge of the Supreme Court.

As some reports suggest, a number of electoral reforms proposals received by the committee in response to its public invitation through newspapers asked for a constitutional amendment to not restrict the qualification of the CEC and the members of the Election Commission to judicial background

Similarly a member of the Election Commission does not necessarily have to be a former judge of the high court or a person who is qualified to become one. The proposal is based on the premise that the honourable judges, with all respect to their legal acumen and wisdom, do not always have the administrative or management experience required to undertake what is essentially an administrative — and not a judicial — task, i.e., the holding of an election.

Had the committee completed its work and the Parliament passed the necessary amendment, its application could have started with the appointment of the new CEC. But since the committee could not complete its work, the appointment had to be based on the current constitutional provisions.

A number of other important proposed reforms are awaiting consideration by the Parliamentary committee and eventually the Parliament as a whole. Introduction of new technology in the voting process to pre-empt or thwart voter impersonation is just one of those vital electoral reforms without which the next election will have a weak credibility.

The ECP's Second Five-Year Strategic Plan (2014-2018)

The ECP announced on June 05, 2014 its Second Five-

Year Strategic Plan (SFYSP) for 2014-2018. This has 13 Strategic Goals sub-divided into 162 Objectives.<sup>9</sup> According to the ECP, it has achieved 61% goals within one and a half year (62% progress against the goals that were to be achieved by December 2015 and 59% progress against the goals that are to be achieved by 2018). Percentage progress on each of the Strategic Goals can be seen in Appendix A. The percentages were calculated by obtaining progress on each individual goal directly from the ECP in addition to follow-up discussions with ECP officials regarding the goals. An analysis of the overall progress is given below:

Strategic Goal 1: Reforming Electoral Legal Framework

This strategic goal focuses mainly on Reforming Electoral Legal Framework in the light of the lessons learnt from General Election 2013. This goal has a total of 16 objectives out of which 15 were to be accomplished by end of December 2015. According to this goal, the ECP was to undertake various measures to reform its Legal Framework. 90% of the goals under this objective had been met by December 2015.

One of the objectives listed has been to examine the system of postal ballot and bring about its improvements. In this regard, the ECP conducted a mock poll during 2015 to test postal ballot for Overseas Pakistanis. In this pilot project an online web application was placed, which the voters could use to register themselves to cast votes through postal ballots. Table 6 shows the response time from selected stations where this exercise was executed. Since the said Postal Ballot System was based on online enrollment of voter using email, this system could not be adopted because majority of the Overseas Pakistanis do not have access to the email especially in the Arab region.

The ECP also tried to use telephone voting to facilitate overseas Pakistanis, however, that was largely unsuccessful due to difficulty in verifying voters and at times due to connectivity issues. At the end of December 2015, therefore, no satisfactory system has yet been put in place to facilitate voting of overseas Pakistanis.

Strategic Goal 2: Election Operations

Strategic Goal 2 focuses on improving election operations. 21 out of a total of 29 objectives were to be achieved by December 2015: overall the progress of this goal was 58% with 65% progress on targets to be achieved by December 2015. These objectives include use of Electronic Voting Machines (EVM), Biometric Voter Identification, and Geographical Information System (GIS) technology for better electoral operations on the day of polling. According to this strategic goal, the ECP aims to rollout EVMs and Biometric Voters Identification system by June 2017. Even though there is progress on technological front, progress on operational plan for voting for Overseas Pakistanis and Internally Displaced Persons (IDP) remains unachieved.

In compliance with the SFYSP (2014-2018)'s goal 2, the ECP has reported to have taken the following measures:

- i. Biometric Pilot Project
- ii. GIS Polling Scheme Pilot Project
- iii. EVM (R&D)
- iv. Result Transmission using mobile phone (Android)

Biometric Pilot Project

The ECP conducted its pilot project regarding use of Biometrics in bye-election of NA-19 (Haripur) as recommended by the Sub-Committee of Electoral Reforms Committee of the Parliament on August 16,

Table 7: Haripur (NA-19) Biometric Availability

2015. This pilot project was run with the assistance of National Database and Registration Authority (NADRA) and Pakistan Telecommunication Authority (PTA). The details of the total number of voters<sup>10</sup> in NA-19 are shown in Table 7.

Training session for the polling staff was conducted on August 13, 2015, that included briefing session on Use of Biometrics for all POs and Polling Staff and a full-scale demonstration of the step-by-step method of using biometric machines. At the end of the poll, the Presiding Office of the polling station would count the Non Biometrically Verified (NBV) and Biometrically Verified (BV) voters and submit these statistics to the RO.

However, there were several limitations that hindered the success rate of the pilot study. These machines were set-up in 30 polling stations and resulted in only 46% success rate and 54% miss rate. This is due to weak signals at a few locations, mismatching of thumb impression, battery issues. In addition, some of the polling staff did not cooperate in using the biometric machines properly. According to the assessment made by the ECP, some serious issues had surfaced regarding the capacity of PTCL infrastructure, connectivity and the load of simultaneous accessing of NADRA database at Islamabad. Unless the ECP agrees on a new paradigm like providing Electoral Rolls data and the Biometrics data of the voters on a secure Biometric Machine at each polling station, the chances of introducing a system of advance biometric verification of a voter before he or she is allowed to vote before the next General Election appears to be slim. ECP further stressed on the principle of 'evolution' by conducting multiple pilot projects (as per international best practices) to gauge the success rate before implementing new technology countrywide.

GIS Based Polling Pilot

The ECP implemented a GIS Polling Scheme for 640 polling stations in the Islamabad Local Government elections held on November 30, 2015. This GIS technology maps all polling stations online for voters' access. The pilot was highly successful and appreciated by electoral observers and media. The only limitations were the provision of transport for the data entry into the software and the reaction time to change in polling stations following final polling scheme. However, this pilot has been successfully implemented in the local government elections and is expected to be gradually scaled-up in 2016 in preparation of GE-2018. The ECP is now introducing Urdu version of the Google

Mapping along with its English version.

Electronic Voting Machines (EVM)

The Commission has conducted in depth study on EVMs. The study also incorporates the pros and cons of using EVMs during the election process. As indicated by officials of the ECP, the EVM Committee (created in 2009) has finalized the specification of these machines and shared those with the vendors. The ECP has finalized the specifications of the EVM and shared these with the Ministry of Information Technology, Electoral Reforms Committee and the local and international vendors. However, the ECP aims to conduct multiple pilot tests before it is introduced nationwide.

Result Transmission using Mobile (Android)

The Mobile Result Transmission technology was introduced on October 6, 2015 in Attock Bye-Elections at 60 polling stations. The pilot was reportedly very successful. The same technology was used again in second pilot testing on November 30, 2015 during the ICT Local Government Elections at 200 polling stations and the results were again reported to be successful. The ECP is now gradually scaling up the magnitude of the project and following the principle of evolution.

Strategic Goal 3: Election Dispute Resolution

The objectives assigned to this goal relate to election dispute resolution. The overall progress under this Strategic Goal was 74% by December 2015. Even though the handbook for Appellate Tribunals and Election Tribunals has been prepared, these are not available online on the website. Only a previous version of the Handbook on Appeals before Appellate Tribunals prepared in 2013 is available on the ECP's official website.<sup>11</sup> The Election Commission was also to create a database system for better management of complaints by December 2015. As reported by the ECP, a software has been prepared that will be used during GE-2018.

Strategic Goal 4: Autonomy of the ECP, Finance and Budget System

This strategic goal focuses on the autonomy of the ECP and improvement of its finance and budget system. Overall progress under the Strategic Goal was 65% by December 2015. While 88% progress was made against goals to be achieved in 2018, 50% progress was made against goals to be achieved by December 2015. The ECP was to undertake an assessment of the level of autonomy that the ECP has, in line with its constitutional role to organize and conduct free and fair elections. This assessment was to be carried out by July 2015. Under this goal, one of the objectives is also to improve areas related to financial autonomy of the Commission by December 2016. At its given state, even the share in revenues generated during the GE-2013 through SMS service 8300 was transferred to the national kitty which the ECP would like to be allowed to be kept with the ECP like other autonomous state organizations such as the NADRA. The ECP was also to establish a Quality Assurance Committee to check the material procured, however, this committee has not been formed as yet.

Strategic Goal 5: Electoral Finance

Under this objective the ECP was to improve Electoral Finance by improving the legal framework dealing with electoral finance and developing a campaign monitoring toolkit for the ECP's monitoring teams. The ECP achieved overall progress of 77% on Strategic Goal 5 by December 2015. The ECP has formulated a Finance Wing to assess the exiting legal framework. However, there is no progress reported on campaign monitoring toolkit as yet.

In 2014, the ECP also created Directorate Political Finance. An independent/designated directorate has been raised for monitoring/dealing with political finance matters. This consists of Director Political Finance (BPS-19), Senior Personal Assistant (BPS-16), and Junior Assistant (BPS-10). The Terms of Reference (TORs) of this directorate is monitoring the statements of assets/liabilities of the members of Parliament/Assemblies, monitoring the election expenses, monitoring the finances of political parties, and research in political finance, proposals for legislation and its reporting. However, no major outcome has been evident since the creation of this Directorate as the operations of the Political Finance Directorate are still limited by law. During the Bye-Election of NA-122 and NA-154, there was unprecedented unchecked extravagant spending. The ECP and the Political Finance Directorate failed to address this.

Strategic Goal 6: Voter Registration and Electoral Rolls

46% progress was made against this Strategic Goal, in part, due to the fact that the ECP was dependant on the performance of NADRA to achieve the goal in its entirety. According to the ECP, though they are working with the NADRA in this regard, complete progress has not been achieved under this till the end of

11. Detailed Report can be accessed at: <http://www.ecp.gov.pk/Misc/VE/IFES-PK-EDR%20Appellate%20Tribunal%20Handbook%20v1%202013-04-02.pdf>

2015. Currently 93 million voters are registered through these Computerized Electoral Rolls, which is updated dynamically through NADRA's database.

Strategic Goal 7: Civic and Voter Education

The objective of this goal is to engage voters through civic and voter education. 5 out of a total of 12 objectives listed under this goal were to be accomplished by end of December 2015. The ECP achieved 48% of this goal by December 2015. In General Elections – 2013 and Local Government Elections – 2015, the ECP broadcasted SMS messages to all 125 million plus mobile users nationwide without spending any cost and had intimated the public and stakeholders about voting details. By using this service, about 85 million hits have been received so far by the ECP. The ECP was also awarded Innovative Use of Technology Award and Accessibility Award by the International Center for Parliamentary Studies for introduction of voters' 8300 SMS service for the nation.

The ECP also introduced video applications using android and iPhone based technologies for the mobile users in which Video message was broadcasted across the country and it is available at Google Play store.

Strategic Goal 8: Gender in Electoral Processes and the ECP

10 out of a total of 15 objects were being targeted by the ECP to achieve improved Gender representation in the electoral process under this goal. Goals to be achieved by December 2015 have an overall progress of only 39%, while the overall progress for Strategic Goal 8 is 53%. PILDAT notes that the ECP's Gender Affairs Unit must work more proactively in achieving this goal in its entirety. ECP's Gender Affairs Unit must work more proactively in achieving this goal. Goals to be achieved by December 2015 have an overall progress of only 39%, while the overall progress for Strategic Goal 8 is 53%. PILDAT notes that the ECP's Gender Affairs Unit must work more proactively in achieving this goal in its entirety.

Strategic Goal 9: Minorities and Persons with Disabilities

In addition to gender inclusiveness, the ECP also needs to focus on voting rights minorities and persons with disabilities. While they aim to achieve this goal by December 2018, the ECP was to undertake a study to understand barriers to participation faced by persons with disabilities. According to the ECP, they have achieved all four objectives under this goal, therefore resulting in 100% progress.

Strategic Goal 10: Training and Capacity Building

This strategic goal focuses more on the long-term objectives that must be met by December 2018. The overall progress under this goal was 58% by December 2015. These objectives to be achieved by December 2015 include trainings and capacity building of the ECP staff and master trainers. A yearly training plan for the Federal Election Academy (FEA) was to be proposed twice during this time (i.e. June 2014 and January 2015). However, this has not been developed as yet. Even though the ECP has conducted several trainings during the Local Government elections, however, increasing the capacity of the ECP officers and trainers is a prolonged task and progress on this has not been reported. In neighbouring India, the electoral training academy is one of the key institutions working with the Indian Election Commission and trains not just national but international participants as well.

Strategic Goal 11: ECP's Stakeholder Outreach

This goal in particular deals with the ECP's outreach to other stakeholders. By December 2015, the overall progress under this goal was 65%. The Commission was to achieve 3 out of 6 objectives listed under this goal by end of 2014. This included a Strategic Communication Plan for the ECP to manage its communications with media and other stakeholder. The ECP reports to have conducted the following consultative sessions:

- a. Political parties: 4 meetings at Islamabad, Peshawar & Karachi
- b. Civil Society Organizations: 7 meetings at Islamabad, Lahore & Karachi (Although PILDAT is well known for its work on election issues and electoral reforms for the last 10 years, it did not receive any intimation of any of these meetings.
- c. Donors Associations: 4 meetings at Islamabad
- d. Review meetings of Steering Committee for Strategic Plan: 2 meetings

A consultative session with media has also been scheduled for the first quarter of 2016.

Strategic Goal 12: ECP's Organizational Structure and Human Resource

9 out of a total of 17 objectives under this goal are reported to have been achieved resulting in an overall progress of 66%. Work on objectives such as developing terms of reference as part of the ECP's Officers and Servants Rules is still in progress with the stakeholders. A decentralisation policy is also being made to establish a separate department at the ECP Secretariat and PEC offices to manage logistics in the ECP and keep track of election material.

Strategic Goal 13: ECP Offices and Infrastructure

The ECP achieved only 30% progress against Strategic Goal 13. 40% progress was made against goals to be achieved by December 2015 while 14% progress against goals to be achieved by 2018. In compliance with this goal, the ECP has prepared a financial plan (shown in Table 8) for improving infrastructure of the ECP. These amounts also account for the Information Technology (IT) equipment and expertise.

It is highly commendable that the ECP, unlike many other state institutions, has a strategic plan with time-bound targets to be achieved. The following points may be considered to further enhance the effectiveness of this exercise:

1. A strategic Plan can be useful only if there is a mechanism to periodically review its progress and make the progress report public. We see no evidence on the ECP website which indicates that a regular monitoring and review of the Strategic Plan has been undertaken during the past 18 months since the Second Strategic Plan was introduced. There is not a single report on its website indicating the progress so far achieved under various goals and objectives. One sign of Strategic Plan not receiving adequate attention from the ECP is that even on January 11, 2016 more than a year after Mr. Ishtiaq Ahmed retired as Secretary ECP, he is still shown to be the Chairman of the Strategic Plan Steering Committee. It is proposed that a quarterly progress report on the 2nd Strategic Plan should be regularly posted on the ECP website.
2. After the completion of the First Strategic Plan, the ECP should have taken a complete ownership of the preparation, monitoring and review of the second Strategic Plan. Although technical and material assistance from donor agencies should be welcomed selectively, continuous reliance on them in the realm of strategic planning should be discouraged.

Conclusion

Year 2015 is the year the Election Commission of Pakistan was officially censured for mismanagement of the 2013 General Election through the General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission. This should have, logically, been the year that the ECP indulged in organisational soul-searching and constituting effective reforms within itself to turn around both its shortcomings as well as enhance its public image and build public trust. Unfortunately, the analysis portrays a different picture.

While the ECP reports a few administrative measures to address the issues raised through the General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission report, no concrete reform has been actualised through these. The ECP should have formed a high-powered committee to look into weaknesses within. A ruthless internal accountability is the least the ECP could do this year after the General Election 2013 Inquiry Commission report.

Year 2015 also saw the ECP conduct one of the largest electoral exercises across major parts of Pakistan through the Local Government system. The ECP should be commended for undertaking such a large exercise, which originally was not a part of its mandate and came under its scope following the passage of the 18th constitutional amendment in 2010. Sadly, though, at the beginning, much the same election-day mismanagement was reflected in the KP Local Government elections, the ECP improved its performance of management of Local Government elections in Punjab and Sindh.

Perhaps the most sticking issue of the ECP has been its inability to assert its constitutional and legal powers effectively. While the ECP has put in place ample amount of rules and codes, most backed by legal provisions such as the ceiling on election expenses, the ECP has generally not been able to ensure strict compliance to these rules and laws. The bye-election in NA-122 (Lahore-V) offered the worst example of the ECP's lack of control and ability to ensure compliance of basic electoral laws and rules such as naked display of money power that failed to provoke the ECP into action, among others.

True that the ECP has had to bear the brunt of judicial inquest and constant interference by the Judiciary in its work, it failed to institutionalise an effective system of legal response. The issue has found further credence in the words by the Honourable Chief Election Commissioner who was quoted as saying that the “High Courts should avoid interfering in the matters of the Election Commission of Pakistan and lawyers should come to the ECP, instead of relying on verdicts from the High Courts.”<sup>12</sup> However, the ECP had the option to deal with this differently. In the case of the NA-122 bye-election and Lahore High Court's relief to the PTI's petition allowing elected representatives to campaign, and the subsequent loud and clear violations of codes and laws by the sitting Government and other parties, the dignified route available to the ECP should have been to call-off the bye-election under section 103 of the Representation of the Peoples Act, 1976 which empowers the Commission to 'stop the polls at any stage of election if it is convinced that it shall not be able to ensure the conduct of the election justly, fairly and in accordance with law due to large scale malpractices, including coercion, intimidation and pressures, prevailing at the election'. The ECP caused irreparable damage to its credibility by not cancelling the bye-election. One of the ECP's greatest weaknesses has been its inability to have an effective and responsible strategy to deal with the Courts.

One of the celebrated Chief Election Commissioners of India, Dr. M. S. Gill, was once quoted as saying that the “ECI has followed a very simple formula for its credibility which includes confidence of the people and the media... the Commission drew its powers from the Constitution and as long as it was supported by the Indian people and the press, no one could question it.”<sup>13</sup> Similar views have been expressed by another former Indian CEC who said, “for enabling the [Election] Commission to discharge its duties effectively, the media can be its most potent and formidable ally.”<sup>14</sup>

What is termed as well as evident as the success of the public and media credibility enjoyed by the ECI is the biggest weakness of the ECP. Despite this being one of the goals of its second, five-year strategic plan, the Election Commission of Pakistan has failed to focus on its public and media outreach to its own peril. The ECP enjoys low level of public trust, which further plummeted from 43% in 2014 to 37% in 2015.<sup>15</sup> The ECP has failed to develop any effective mechanism of regular and effective media interaction in 2015.

However, on achieving its strategic objectives set under the ECP Second Five-Year Strategic Plan 2014-2018, the ECP has achieved 61% overall progress against all the targets to be met by 2018. In comparison, for the First Five-Year Strategic Plan (2010-2014) the progress achieved by 2013 was 66%. In this way, the ECP appears to be on track in achieving the goals under the Second Five-Year Strategic Plan having achieved 61% progress 3 years before the 2018 deadline.

Recommendations

Following are some of the recommendations for improvements in the role and performance of the ECP:

1. Free hand to the ECP during election cycle

While reviewing the performance of the ECP, it should also be acknowledged that the ECP has been working under tremendous pressure over the past three years. It has been observed that a section of the judiciary did not treat the ECP with the level of respect this independent statutory body deserved and that is accorded to electoral authorities in other democracies such as India. Superior judiciary issues orders in the middle of an election cycle like it did during the bye-election in NA-122 (Lahore-V) and NA-154 (Lodhran-I).

It is widely reported that one of the reasons that the Indian Election Commission evolved into an effective institution is that the superior judiciary restrains itself after an election is announced till the time results are announced and largely leaves it to the ECI to conduct the electoral process without any interference. There may be a merit in considering a similar course for Pakistan. Either the Honourable Supreme Court can take a suo moto notice and pass an order regarding this or another instrument may be employed but this serious issue needs to be addressed. A public statement of the Honourable CEC criticizing the interference of High Courts has further brought the serious issue into limelight. He observed that the High Courts should not interfere in the matters pertaining to the Election Commission of Pakistan. The Chief Election Commissioner contended that it was not necessary that each decision of the High Courts should be complied with, as the Election Commission of Pakistan made decisions on the basis of nature and sensitivity of the case.

The ECP has its weaknesses and flaws but it is also true that the ECP was not allowed to use its independent judgment in deciding the dates of various important activities. The election body, for example, was subjected to extreme pressures to agree to an unrealistic deadline for the completion of fresh computerised electoral rolls in 2011-2012. For Local Government elections in various provinces, the superior judiciary repeatedly fixed the dates, which the ECP at times considered unrealistic. Some political parties openly ridiculed and unjustly accused the ECP of being a party to alleged poll rigging in General Election 2013. This campaign must have greatly demotivated the ECP and its staff as well.

2. Review of ECP Capacity in the face of new responsibilities and challenges

Since after the 18th Amendment to the Constitution in 2010, the responsibilities of the ECP have enhanced many folds. Local Government Elections in the provinces, federal capital area and the cantonments have been made responsibility of the ECP but apparently the human capital at the ECP has not grown in quantity and quality to match the challenge. It is important that the ECP should establish a full fledged and modern Human Resource Department and it should undertake a comprehensive study of its human resource needs to meet the enhanced responsibilities. A similar review of all its resources and capacity should be undertaken.

3. Political Parties involvement in ensuring Free & Fair Election

Political parties also cannot be absolved of the obligation to contribute to orderly elections. They must educate their workers and voters on the polling procedures, train their polling agents and teach tolerance to their workers.

Most importantly, it is the lack of pro-active role of the parties within the Parliament on instituting required electoral reforms. Instead of bolstering support for reforms to provide an even playing field to all in elections, the Parliament, despite having a repository of electoral reform proposals over the past few years, has failed to play its due role, be it in reforms or on timely appointment of the ECP members and the CEC.

4. Weak Public Relation by the ECP

The Election Commission of Pakistan, which enjoys nearly total constitutional autonomy, has failed to lead from the front. Instead of seeking media and public support, two strongest allies of electoral bodies in any country, it has failed to connect and interact with both. Its existence remains aloof and removed from the society in general. This may be a result of the general attitude of the judiciary who try to stay away from the media limelight with, of course, a few exceptions. Since the entire top leadership of the ECP is composed of former judges, this tendency to stay away from public, political parties and media may have crept into the ECP as well. Going forward, there is a major cultural shift required within the ECP. This shift is not required for the ECP to bolster its image alone but public trust in the independence, impartiality and effectiveness in managing elections is critical for the sustainability of democracy in Pakistan. It is important that the ECP appoints a senior person of the Additional Secretary or at least Joint Secretary level as the ECP spokesperson. The spokesperson should be an articulate and knowledgeable person who can interact with the media on a regular basis. During the election period a regular weekly briefing to the media may be a good idea too.

5. Greater Accessibility of the CEC and EC Members to political parties and Public

Periodic meetings of the CEC with political parties heads, senior media persons like Editors and senior talk show hosts for the purpose of briefing them on key issues and seeking their input is also strongly recommended. Code of Conduct, use of new technology, political finance can be some of the important issues to be discussed with party heads. Media should be regularly updated on the measures the ECP is taking to improve the quality of elections and can share the challenges and constraints within which the ECP has to operate.

The ECP had established Media and Civil Society Forums sometime back but their meetings have been discontinued. The ECP may consider reviving that.

6. General Election 2013 Report by the ECP

Although 31 months have lapsed since the latest General Election held in May 2013, the ECP has not published the report of 2013 Election Report. This not only creates an information gap, it dents the ECP credibility. The General Election 2013 Report should be released forthwith and it should be built into the rules that the General Election report is released within one year.

7. The ECP Annual Report

ECP should adopt the practice of compiling and releasing an annual report. All federal government ministries and divisions are bound by the rules of business to issue a Year Book covering the financial year (July to June) by September of each year. All corporate entities publish an Annual Report. ECP should institute the tradition of compiling and issuing an Annual Report and it should cover all major events of the year including the bye-elections, local government elections etc. that may have taken place during the year.

8. Challenge of Enforceability of Election Laws, Rules and regulations by the ECP

Although Pakistan has comprehensive electoral provisions and laws, its main challenge is in their enforceability. ECP also is facing this challenge. It has not done enough in the past to make candidates conform to the ceiling of spending in an election. Recent bye-election in NA-122 (Lahore-V) has highlighted the problem as naked display of money power failed to provoke ECP into action. If due to court stay orders ECP felt that its writ is not being accepted, it should have postponed the election but should not have compromised on the quality of election. ECP should make sure that all election laws, rules and regulations are accepted and implemented. If it does not do that, it will not be doing justice to its constitutional mandate.

9. Election Tribunals be made to complete their work within the mandated period of four months

Election Tribunals appointed after the 2013 General Election had a mandate of completing their work within 4 months as stipulated under the law. It remains inexplicable as to why the ECP allowed the Tribunals to delay the completion of their work for nearly 3 years. Apparently, a major delay occurred due to long stay-orders granted by the superior judiciary. In some cases ECP forwarded the election petitions after considerable delay and in some cases tribunals did not efficiently deal with the cases. ECP should take up all such causes of delay and either fix the law further or take appropriate initiatives to avoid such delays in the future.

10. The ECP Website – a great improvement but further improvements needed

Although the ECP website has become quite comprehensive over the past few years, ECP continues to show reluctance at timely uploading of certain public information. The ECP, despite promises, has continued to delay the posting of Forms 13,14 and 15 on its website. Similarly, the details of voter turnout figures and detailed statistics of local Government elections are not made available online. Much the same reluctance has been displayed by the ECP in posting public information such as political parties' annual statements of accounts on its website. Earlier, the ECP had resisted placing legislators' statements of assets and liabilities online. A decision needs to be made in principal that all publically available material should be placed on the website.

11. Feedback to Public on the ECP Initiatives

A culture of lack of pro-active reporting prevails in the ECP in many areas. For instance, it remains unclear as to what were the reports made by the ECP observers deployed in some by elections to check conformance to laws. As a public body charged with a Constitutional obligation to conduct free and fair elections, the ECP must conform to openness, accessibility and transparency standards. A similar disclosure on the ECP pilot use of biometric recognition of voters and Electronic Voting Machine should also be made public. The ECP has also done some mock voting exercises for Overseas Pakistanis voting and their results should also be made public and placed on website.

12. Making the Federal Election Academy an active and effective training institution:

Keeping in view the strong need of training of various levels of election staff, the Academy should become a more active and effective institution with all the year round calendar of training programmes.
